

April 6, 2006

It is imperative that there be no Bank of Wal-Mart. Look at their track record in retail

Wal-Mart may have low prices, but since the first time I walked in one of their stores in the 1980's the quality of goods have become poorly made and produced outside the USA. I remember the days when they only sold "MADE IN AMERICA". Their way of doing business hurts communities more than help.

Their employees are underpaid, overworked and a majority of them are single parents who cannot afford to NOT work. I have seen my daughter experience a poor working environment, mental cruelty and degrading remarks by management. I have seen other young mothers terrorized with threats of job loss due to calling out for their sick child - daycares and schools do not accept sick children.

Do I want them to manage my money? I don't think so. Do I trust them to treat tellers any differently. I don't think so. Do we need a powerful corporation owning banks? NO.

Let Wal-Mart play in one arena - retail, commercial, but keep them out of the banking industry.

Geraldine M Cassidy